Low inner body temperature results in slow metabolism. When the metabolism is slow, the body functions slow down too, resulting in tiredness, increased weight, shallow and slow breathing, confusion and memory loss, decreased energy levels, and disturbed sleep among many other factors. Low inner body temperature does not depend on how cold or hot the skin feels, instead, it is the temperature of the internal organs.

The optimum body temperature is 37 degrees Celsius or 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit. The body needs to maintain this temperature for it to work effectively. For every one-degree drop in body temperature, the metabolism slows down by 13% or more. It is no secret that decreased metabolism results in obesity and increased weight, therefore, to manage and reduce weight, the body's metabolism needs to speed up.

The digestive enzymes need an optimal temperature of 37 degrees Celsius to break down the food we consume into absorbable nutrients. There are specific enzymes for breaking down carbohydrates, proteins, and fats. The enzyme lipase breaks down fats into smaller molecules known as fatty acids and glycerol. When the nutrients we consume are broken down properly, the body utilizes these nutrients efficiently which helps in weight loss.

As mentioned above, if body temperature is below the optimal range, the enzymes don't work as efficiently as they should, which results in the decreased breakdown of food, meaning the nutrients are not absorbed properly which can consequently result in increased weight. Obese people show a constantly low inner body temperature. The manufacturers of Alpilean have come up with a solution for this low inner body temperature.
